REVIEW OF AJAX AND PHP PACKT

- The first time I laid my eyes on the Sistine Chapel, something stirred. It was not a logical, mental analysis of the mastery of the ceiling, but a gut wrenching feeling of smallness and awe. I stayed there for maybe 2 hours before I could gather my wits and walk away. I've been there again. A few times. Every single time I haven't been able to stop staring at the ceiling until my neck hurts; however, that sense of awe is diminished. That happened the first time I read "A hundred years of solitude". Since then I've read it at least 20 times, understanding a bit more with every reading and appreciating the magnitude of Garcia Marquez' masterpiece. However, nothing in the world compares to reading this book for the first time. I am envious of all the people who haven't read it. It is there for you to discover.

- I recognize that lots of people think this book is wonderful. However, as an extremely well-read English major, I think Marquez must be laughing. Without repeating the comments of the other one-star reviewers, I'll just say that I was more than underwhelmed. It's nonsensical, and (am I the only one who noticed?) misogynistic.
