E CUCINARE LE ERBE SPONTANEE

- A History of Narrative Film chronicles the earliest history of the narrative film from its beginnings with Edison and the Lumieres, through the great silent era, the advents of sound and color, to today's world of computer generated special effects. The book focuses on significant technical developments and artistic trends in the history of films. It includes chapters on the coming of sound, Eisenstein and the rise of montage, genres like the film noir, directors such as Orson Welles, W.D. Griffith and Alfred Hitchcock, and foreign films. It is richly illustrated with photos and prints from most of the films covered in the text. David Cook is a professor of English and Film Studies at Emory University in Atlanta, Georgia. He has taught courses in film studies for over 15 years.

- 'The Humane Interface' was a very good book. I particularly enjoyed the discussion about the metrics used to quantify the efficiency of a given interface based on its information content. Important stuff. That portion of the book should be required reading for anyone designing an interface.
