REVIEW OF 11 PRACTICE PAPERS FOR THE CEM TEST PACK 1 CGP 11 CEM

- This book contains eleven lectures given to the general public on various occasions on a variety of topics. Taken together they sum up much of Jung's analytical psychology, covering the subjects: dream analysis, problems of psychotherapy, aims of psychotherapy, theory of types, stages of life, contrasts between Freud and Jung, archaic man, psychology and literature, basic postulates (i.e. philosophic notions) of analytical psychology, spiritual problem of modern man, and, psychotherapists or the clergy. Jung's professional writings can be a hard read being long and difficult to follow. There is none of that problem in this work. Here Jung is clear as a bell. The book is highly recommended for those beginning their inquiry into Jung. Although <Modern Man> was first published in 1933 it still holds relevance to a contemporary audience. One major theme running through several speeches is that many people seem to inherently want to believe in something spiritual, though this certainly does not necessarily imply mainstream religion such as Christianity. We only have to visit a new age bookshop packed with Buddhist and other Asian philosophic texts, not to mention esoteric volumes on spirits, magic and psychic phenomena, to realize that many people are 'looking for something in their lives.' Of course not all of us have spirituality as an issue or problem and Jung at one point goes to some trouble to point this out. Some are hung up on sex, other on power, etc. In these cases a psychology other than Jung's analytical psychology is recommended.
