REVIEW OF HOUSE OF STAIRS WILLIAM SLEATOR FACTOMORE

- I just read this book for the second time, at age 43. The first time was at age 15, as a school assignment, and boy, did I not get anything from it back then! But this time, I was enthralled. I gasped, cried, jumped up out of my chair. I read it in ONE SITTING. It is exquisitely written, deliciously horrifying, agonizingly suspenseful, overwhelmingly compelling. Afterward, I could not start another book for days while I thought about the experience I had just had. Read this book as an adult. It is a true great of literature. It is a life experience that everyone should have. And now some warnings: It is set in Puritan America -- not the most relevant setting for modern readers. Those looking for universality may find the setting remote and hard to relate to. Also, the first chapter, The Customs House, is really an introduction, rather than a chapter contributing to the story. It is forgivable to skip it.

- I read this book when I was 16 and I totally fell in love with it. I love the power it hands over to women. Hawthorne does a great job in illustrating the kind of prejudice society extends to women for actions that can be equally distributed to men but even more so he shows the determination of a woman to overcome whatever adversities may be present with renewed pride and dignity.
