REVIEW OF JAZZ DRUMMERS WORKBOOK

- Jared Diamond here continues the fine work he began with The Third Chimpanzee and Guns, Germs, and Steel. In Collapse, he examines the reasons why some societies have failed while others have succeeded, sometimes against all the odds. Once again he uses environmental and geographical determinism to look at the histories of these societies, and comes up with fascinating new theories to explain their rise and demise. I was particularly interested in the sections dealing with present day Montana and China, as they indicate so many potential and actual problems (as well as some good news) that face our world. I also found the segments on the Norse colonies in Greenland, Iceland, and elsewhere fascinating in the way Diamond analyzes the reasons for their successes and failures. The segments on Easter Island and other Pacific islands also make intriguing reading as they demonstrate the connections between environmental and economic activity. In fact, one of the chief pleasures of Collapse is Diamond's ability to relate human events like the Rwanda-Burundi genocide to environmental factors. There will be many who will disagree with Diamond's thesis and with his list of suggested adjustments and improvements to the world ecological/environmental balance, but everyone will agree that Collapse is an important and stimulating achievement.

- Devil's Bride is what a romance novel should be. Strong hero and heroine, good mystery all tied up in a great love story. Stephanie Laurens is must read and a must keep for me.
