REVIEW OF AUDELS CARPENTERS AND BUILDERS GUIDE BOOK

- This may possibly be the best book in the world. In her compassionate, vivid, touching and skillful portrait of the life of Appalachian woman Ivy Rowe, Lee Smith has created a character with an unforgettable story---earthy yet touched by the magic of mountain fairytales and haunted by the fading echoes of a lost time and place. A perfect achievement of the storytelling art.

- In this short book, Sarfati responds to the book "Teaching About Evolution." His style is passionate and his arguments are vigorous, which is no doubt why so many reviewers reacted so strongly (negatively) to his book (often without addressing the real facts of the matter). However, the basic logic of the book is sound, and Sarfati is completely open with stating his biases and presuppositions; a characteristic that is utterly lacking in most evolutionist writings. When Sarfati addresses the various scientific problems with evolution, he does so with careful reasoning and sound argumentation. The flaws that he finds in "Teaching About Evolution" are astonishing; especially the inconsistency of "Teaching About Evolution's" responses to creation science. This is a good "starter" book on creation and evolution, and it should help to continue opening up discussion and debate on this important issue. If evolutionists are sincerely confident in their theories, they should not fear open circulation and discussion in the scientific realms.
