REVIEW OF LAWS STATE OF MARYLAND

• Jennifer Overton, calling on her extraordinary resources as a wife, mother, educator, actor and author, has produced a work of compelling intimacy and irresistible charm. The story of Nic--- a bright and beautiful boy who is diagnosed autistic--- is told with unflinching honesty and palpable love. Jennifer and her husband David move mountains to try to provide the best for their son, while making sure his unique perspective isn't crushed by well-meaning mainstreamers. The devices of poetry, art, screenplay, journal, and stage play are enlisted to make Nic's world accessible even to those who have never had an autistic child in his or her life--- and the ride is exhilarating! This book is luminous and painful and funny and profound--- and yet you feel as if you are sitting in Jennifer's kitchen, listening to it all as Nicholas walks in and out of the room. Go ahead--- fall in love with him!

- I about way too many of books in this area, but this is a staple that one needs. Most of the books give some generic crap advice which boils down to, "just try, a pretty girl might actually accept your advances". This is more like a manual, a few other books that were worth the paper they were printed on, were the "machivellian guide to womanizing", "How to Attract Anyone, Anytime, Anyplace: The Smart Guide to Flirting". doc loves "the system" and "double your dating". I own all the rest, and I can say doc loves book is only for after you get a girl. the rest focus on how to get her. Those are the only solid books I can honestly recommend to get tight game. Robert greene's art of seduction is supposed to be good, but that is the only one that I have yet to read, that I even heard was worth while. Buy a book, read it... try the stuff out at least 10 times... then you will know if the book sucks. I could list way more that were not worth reading then books that were solid.
