REVIEW OF CSIR PREVIOUS QUESTION PAPERS

- Perhaps the single most important book that I've ever read. Adorno & Horkheimer note the way that reason, which was supposed to be a means of attaining freedom for man, has dovetailed with power and done the exact opposite of that. If you're a lover of liberty -- real liberty involving self determination and freedom from delusion -- read this book.

- Adorno and Horkheimer are associated with the Frankfurt school of thought in post-WWII Germany. In this book, Dialectic of Enlightenment, the two thinkers dissect the post-war condition looking at all aspects of cultural identity as based on ancient enlightenment-esque ideals. This book illuminates the devastating results of progressivist models of history in late capitalism. Probably the most famous essay deals with the culture industry and how, in post-war capitalism, movies, books, television all become tools of subjugation through which a falsified sense of individuality is produced and commodified to the ends of keeping the consumers of this industry distracted enough to ignore the insidiousness of that which we allow to control us. A very dense read, poetic in areas, but challenging throughout. Adorno is often criticized for being a cynic, but I think that under his often scathing view of modern culture is a message that through exacting self-reflection change of the "total system" can occur. These themes are expanded on in Adorno's other works: Minima Moralia, and Negative Dialectic.
