REVIEW OF INTERPERSONAL COMMUNICATION 2ND EDITION FLOYD

- Without a doubt, this volume makes the strongest case yet for the Two-Gospel Hypothesis -- the view that Mark was actually the third gospel written, and that his gospel represents a summarized and conflated version of Matthew and Luke. The authors detail the wealth of external evidence that illustrates the priority of Matthew -- a conclusion which, if accepted, automatically discredits the Two-Source Hypothesis and the Farrer Hypothesis. The authors go on to show that the external evidence is compatible with both the Two-Gospel Hypothesis and the Augustinian hypothesis (Matthew, Mark, Luke). Most helpful is the way that the authors go line by line through the gospel of Mark and show how he has taken some of Matthew and some of Luke. But it's one thing to go line by line through Mark and show how his gospel could be a summarized and conflated version of Matthew and Luke. It's something else to consider all of the material that Mark does NOT include, and ask why he omitted it. The authors of the book acknowledge this important question, i.e. why would Mark omit the sermon on the mount/plain, and why would he omit the Lord's Prayer. Unfortunately, I find the authors' reasoning difficult to accept. The Synoptic Problem is enormously complex and the authors do provide an introduction for people who are 'just getting started.' Still, I'd recommend a basic proficiency in Greek and at least a familiarity with the various solutions to the Synoptic Problem before picking up this book. It is well worth the read.

- Excellent math program for homeschooling students. I have used various other titles and found the Saxon math program to be the best for all 3 of my children. The best part is the step by step approach to learning. Each day, a new topic is introduced as well as a review of all the previous topics. Students retain more and do better on achievement tests. For example, when studying fractions, you learn a little at a time and always review from before. You don't just do fractions for a chapter and never see them again until your annual achievement test.
