REVIEW OF TEACHER OBSERVATION

REPORT OF THE STUDENT CENTERED CLASSROOM

- Albert Camus is without a doubt a literary genius, his book The Stranger was extremely well written and tells an extremely poignant story about one man and his existential life. We follow the character Meursault through events in his life, where he seems simply not to care for much of anything. When Meursault suddenly finds himself killing a man, and sitting before trial he realizes his beliefs, that we are all alone in the world, we all die, and without hope we can truly live again.
- "The Stranger" by Albert Camus is an allegory of our times. A young Algerian, Meursault, commits an absurd crime one hot day on a beach. In a world without meaning, he commits a meaningless act. The retribution, however, for murder is profound and so is the walking philosophical problem that Camus has created with his character, Meursault. The reader waits for a logical conclusion but is confronted only with larger questions. "The Stranger" is a definitive Existentialist text because it enacts a conception of the problem of existence and proves its own point via anti-climax. Only Sartre's "Nausea" really compares to "The Stranger" in its impact on Existentialist fiction. It is a critical character study in the psychology of loss for modern times. The Algerian Meursault lives his life as if inside a house-of-mirrors and his pointless crime brings his chimerical existence into sharp relief, exposing the false reflection of his ominous life. With "The Stranger", Camus paints a convincing portrait in a terse style with believable characters who act out the psychological problems we all must eventually face.
