REVIEW OF CHAPTER 15 SECTION 1 GUIDED READING A NEW DEAL FIGHTS THE DEPRESSION

- My mother was an enlisted wife and lived in military housing until 2002. I grew up in the navy. This is exactly how it was and is. Maybe it varies by region or base, but there are still major problems for enlisted wives. Poverty, isolation, and depression ARE common. Although there are women who are able to overcome these issues, it is not common. Military families deserve higher pay, better benefits (tricare is pathetic) better housing (without asbestos) and access to childcare help/resources. None of this is available which lead to very sad living conditions for MOST enlisted wives. And yes there is extreme classism in the military, anybody who doesn't see it is not on the receiving end of it.

- It is not often that I find a book, let alone a series, that remains in my thoughts for weeks after finishing it, but this one did. Jack Whyte has been criticized some in this forum for his weak character development, but I can't see it. He did such a great job of creating his characters and making me love them that I felt very real shock and grief when both Dedalus and Ambrose died. I kept fearing that Donuil would be next! I had to keep reading to make sure the people I had grown to love through the books made it! I will say that as a woman, I was a bit bored by the seemingly endless battles and battle strategies, but I can see that they were necessary to the story. I did find the weaponry and descriptions of sword crafting very interesting, and it opened my eyes to things I've never wondered at before. Thank you, Jack Whyte, for your totally plausible, exceptionally well-written interpretation of a wonderful legend. Of the 6 months I spent savouring your words, I wouldn't say a moment of it was wasted time.
