REVIEW OF ANSWERS JEPPESEN PRE SOLO WRITTEN EXAM

- John Henry Newman (1801-1890) was an English Anglican cleric and a leader of the Oxford Movement; he converted to Catholicism in 1845 and eventually became a Cardinal. He wrote many influential books, such as Apologia Pro Vita Sua (An Image classic), The Idea Of A University: Defined And Illustrated, An essay in aid of a grammar of assent; (A Doubleday image book), etc. He wrote in the Postscript to the original (1845) edition, "Since the above was written, the Author has joined the Catholic Church. It was his intention and wish to have carried this Volume through the Press before deciding finally on this step. But... he recognized in himself a conviction... so clear as to supersede further deliberation... His first act on his conversion was to offer his Work for revision to the proper authorities; but the offer was declined on the ground that it was written and partly printed before he was a Catholic, and that it would come before the reader in a more persuasive form, if he read it as the author wrote it." In his Introduction, he states, "the Christianity of history is not Protestantism. If ever there were a safe truth, it is this." (Pg. 7) He states that the book is directed towards the difficulty that, "from the nature of the human mind, time is necessary for the full comprehension and perfection of great ideas... This may be called the Theory of Development of Doctrine." (Pg. 29-30) He concludes that "We have no reason to suppose that there is so great a distinction of dispensation between ourselves and the first generation of Christians, as that they had a living infallible guidance, and we have not." (Pg. 85) Later, he suggests that "the notion of development under infallible authority is not a ... less winning hypothesis... then the chance coincidence of events... or the working of Antichrist, to account for the rise of Christianity and the formation of its theology." (Pg. 92) He admits that in Church history there have been "Bishops against Bishops, Fathers against Fathers, Fathers against themselves," but asks instead "whether... the Church herself, acting through Pope or Council... has ever contradicted her own enunciations. If so, the hypothesis which I am advocating is at once shattered; but, till I have positive and distinct evidence of the fact, I am slow to give credence to the existence of so great an improbability." (Pg. 120-121) He concludes that if the whole of Christendom is to form one Kingdom, "one head is essential"; he then adds, "wherever the Pope has been renounced, decay and division have been the consequence." (Pg. 154-155) His summary statement is perhaps this: "modern Catholicism is nothing else but simply ... the natural and necessary development, of the doctrine of the early church, and that its divine authority is included in the divinity of Christianity." (Pg. 169) Obviously, this book is far too complex to cover within the confines of an Amazon review. But for anyone interested in historical Christian doctrine, or Catholicism, this is an essential work to study.

- This story takes us on-board one of the most popular fictional Destroyers of the story's WW2 era Royal Navy; yet it is anything but a war-propaganda-based tale! In fact, quite the opposite. I found that quality curiously delightful in spite of the common writings of the period. We had just gotten out of Korea then, and would be soon embracing for Vietnam. My sympathy went sky-high for the sailors. Mr. MacLean did a great job 'humanizing' the characters. I was compelled to care for them, worry about them hope with their hopes and be sad with their sorrow.. Mr. MacLean gave us details of the ship with extreme delicacy. I could see the curves of this great ship; the outlines of her guns, the water furrow off her bow and the sillouettes of the enemy's planes but I never was burdened with macro-intensive, semi-relevant details typical of military writers. I was never bored with the descriptions and always sad when she (the ship) was damaged. This is a good read. If you've ever wondered what life aboard a military vessell was in WW2; ever wondered what men thought that were facing death over and over again and how they dealt with (or didn't deal with it), then this is a story for you. I think it breeds the imagination very well. This really is good movie material.
