REVIEW OF TRESSA 12 YEARS OLD MUM BOOK FREE

- Tim Flannery shares many similarities with Jared Diamond as scientists who turned to a wider public audience - obviously there is money to be made in selling books. The trick to it seems to be to market your credibility as a scientist to the vast technologically illiterate masses with the promise of simplifying the details into cocktail party-sized morsels. The trajectory of Flannery's career from English major to Zoologist/Paleontologist and now the director of the South Australian Museum (of what is never mentioned) the world has produced the perfect sage to synthesize climate modeling, oceanography and the gritty details of Kyoto. Not being able to check all the facts in the Weather Makers, I have presented one example that stuck me as symptomatic of Flannery's breathless approach. Quoted below is a paragraph on nuclear energy from The Weather Makers (Chapter 30). "Three factors loom large in the mind of the public, however, whenever nuclear power is mentioned - safety, disposal of waste and bombs. The horror of the 1986 Chernobyl disaster in Ukraine was a catastrophe of stupendous proportions whose consequences, two decades after the accident, just keep growing. Thyroid cancer is a rare illness, with just one in a million children developing it spontaneously. But one-third of children under four years old who were exposed to fallout from Chernobyl will develop the disease. Seven per cent (about 3.3 million people) of the population of Ukraine have suffered illness as a result of the meltdown, while in neighbouring Belarus, which received 70 per cent of the fallout, the situation is even worse. Only 1 per cent of the country is free from contamination, 25 per cent of its farmland has been put permanently out of production, and nearly 1000 children die each year from thyroid cancer. Currently, 25 per cent of the Belarus budget is spent on alleviating the effects of the disaster."Now compare this to excerpts from the World Health Organization report to the United Nations on the results of the Chernobyl accident:- As of mid-2005, fewer than 50 deaths had been directly attributed to radiation from the disaster.- About 4000 cases of thyroid cancer, mainly in children and adolescents at the time of the accident, have resulted from the accident's contamination and at least nine children died of thyroid cancer; however the survival rate among such cancer victims, judging from experience in Belarus, has been almost 99%.- Persistent myths and misperceptions about the threat of radiation have resulted in "paralyzing fatalism" among residents of affected areas.- Except for the still closed, highly contaminated 30 kilometer area surrounding the reactor, and some closed lakes and restricted forests, radiation levels have mostly returned to acceptable levels.This then is my concern with this book - Flannery is obviously concerned about global warning but I would prefer a credibly researched approach to the problem.

- this is a fine book i bought years ago.Recently i ordered it from Amazon used for a friend as it is out of print. it has many fun usable projects. Linda Ligon gives good solid instruction that really take the reader/knitter through the steps to a successful project. A friend who is a splendid knitter told me recently that she learned how to knit socks from this book! It is especially helpful that this book addresses the issues of home spun wool. I know of no book out there today that provides specifics for spinners, good solid instructions and provides basic, beautiful projects real people can wear.
