REVIEW OF DBQ 12 INDUSTRIAL REVOLUTION BEGINNINGS ANSWER KEY

- This is an example of the most God-awful types of "history books"--the kind we hated during school. It feels like this woman wrote the book in order to impress her fellow professors, those who know in detail the dizzying, astoundingly-boring names of tribes, areas of Mongolia in the distant past. She doesn't bother to explain the places in relation to anything now, nor the tribes in relation to anything--and just goes on and on and on with name after name. Here is an example of what I mean in the first paragraph of the first chapter: "The first known Eurasian route is that of the northern steppes. By this trail, in paleolithic times, the Aurignacian culture spread through Siberia--an "Aurignacian Venus" has been found at Malta, not far from Irkutsk, on the upper Angara River--and thence into northern China, where Teilhard de Chardin notes the presence of Aurignacian-type hearths buried in the loess at Kweitung, near Ningsia in Kasue, and at the Siara-osso-gol, southwest of Yulin in the northern region of Shensi. Similarly, the Magdalenian culture seems to be represented in Siberia (on the upper Yenisei) and in Manchuria (at Dolonnor [Tolun], Manchouli, and Khailar), and in Hopei. Here in the upper cave of Chowkowitz...." ad nauseum. No discussion of what "Aurignacian" culture IS. No map reference (i.e. See Figure 1). Even in terms of a dissertation or thesis, this is awful. Especially when I compare this with Jack Weatherford's wonderful book Genghis Khan, which gives a brilliant overview and understanding of the impact of Genghis Khan, which has been distorted throughout history. I developed a fascination for Mongolian history lately, but this book--does nothing to scratch that itch. And after 50 pages, I could see no redeeming value in the book or reason why I should plow through 539 pages of this muck. Even educational works should be interesting.

- I give Russ and the Almost Perfect Day a very positive evaluation in terms of inclusive children's literature. It describes an interesting series of events, centred on a character who happens to have a disability, but this disability is not the focus of the book. Russ is similar to other students in his interests, activities and problems. The storyline is simple yet interesting as it presents a wonderful school day for Russ. All children would love to imagine a fun filled day similar to his experience. He must make a difficult decision that other children can relate to, and several of his emotions are expressed through the colourful, appealing photographs on each page. There are no stereotypes or labels used, all settings are inclusive of someone with a disability, and all situations show Russ in valued roles, as an active and contributing individual. I highly recommend it as a valuable example of how inclusive children's literature should be written. It would be an asset to any school or home library. Joan McHale
