An unassuming scientist takes an unbelievable adventure in the Middle East in this “extraordinary” novel—the inspiration for the major motion picture starring Ewan McGregor (The Guardian). Dr. Alfred Jones lives a quiet, predictable life. He works as a civil servant for the National Centre for Fisheries Excellence in London; his wife, Mary, is a determined, no-nonsense financier; he has simple routines and unassuming ambitions. Then he meets Muhammad bin Zaidi bani Tihama, a Yemeni sheikh with money to spend and a fantastic—and ludicrous—dream of bringing the sport of salmon fishing to his home country. Suddenly, Dr. Jones is swept up in an outrageous plot to attempt the impossible, persuaded by both the sheikh himself and power-hungry members of the British government who want nothing more than to spend the sheikh's considerable wealth. But somewhere amid the bureaucratic spin and Yemeni tall tales, Dr. Jones finds himself thinking bigger, bolder, and more impossibly than he ever has before. Told through letters, emails, interview transcripts, newspaper articles, and personal journal entries, Salmon Fishing in the Yemen is “a triumph” that both takes aim at institutional absurdity and gives loving support to the ideas of hopes, dreams, and accomplishing the impossible (The Guardian).

REVIEW OF THE DARK WILD PIERS TORDAY

- This is certainly an important book, for the subject should have our urgent attention, and the treatment given it here by Jared Diamond is broad and deep enough for an interested lay reader. Unfortunately, it is not a good book although it is a compendium of useful information and worth reading if you can force yourself through it. The book suffers from the failures one finds in word-processed manuscripts that have become too big for their authors' memories and that were nevertheless rushed into print without editing. The quality is variable, and some sections are quite good; perhaps the historically oldest chapters that have benefited from a larger share of the author's time. But in many places sentences and paragraphs wind about, carrying a burden of meta-dialogue that is characteristic of stream-of-consciousness writing, but that does not help the clarity and structure of the arguments, a tendency which gets worse towards the end of the book. This gives the reader a sense of a big ambitious work just running out of steam; turning into a let down. There are other problems. Grating Americanisms, such as referring to earth as "dirt" and to petrol as "gas", get in way of reading pleasure for people who speak and expect good English. Repetition of obvious ideas becomes tedious and at times insulting to the reader. In some places (not not in others) a condescending tone is painfully evident. For example: "What makes you think that, as of January 1, 2006, for the first time in human history, technology will miraculously stop causing new unanticipated problems while it just solves the problems that it previously produced?" (page 505, hard cover edition) I don't think that, and I don't like to be lectured to in that rhetorical manner; one bordering on sarcastic put down. This sentence could become: "We can expect technology to continue causing new unanticipated problems while it solves existing ones." This manuscript should be edited by a professional, at least 30% of the bulk removed (possibly 50% could be deleted without sacrificing useful content; see the example above), and an organized logical structure given to the arguments. I urge the publishers to arrange that for an improved second edition.

- I would recommend this book without a problem. It was thought provoking and an easy read.
