"This course and this book are about management and managers. Managers are one thing that all organizations--no matter the size, kind, or location--need. And there's no doubt that the world managers face has changed, is changing, and will continue to change. The dynamic nature of today's organizations means both rewards and challenges for the individuals who will be managing those organizations. Management is a dynamic subject, and a textbook on it should reflect those changes to help prepare you to manage under the current conditions. We've written this 14th edition of Management to provide you with the best possible understanding of what it means to be a manager confronting change and to best prepare you for that reality. But not every student aspires to a career in management. And even if you do, you may be five or ten years away from reaching a managerial position. So you might rightly feel that taking a course in management now may be getting ahead of the game. We hear you. In response to these concerns, we've added new material to this book that is important and relevant to everyone working in an organization--manager and non-manager alike. Our "Workplace Confidential" pages identify, analyze, and offer suggestions for dealing with the major challenges that surveys indicate frustrate employees the most. You should find these pages valuable for helping you survive and thrive in your workplace. Surprisingly, this topic has rarely been addressed in business programs. Inclusion in an introductory management course appeared to us to be a logical place to introduce these challenges and to provide guidance in handling them"--

REVIEW OF MANAGEMENT 10TH EDITION ROBBINS

- I have used other Barclay commentaries, and he never disappoints. Even if I don't agree with a particular interpretation, I find his ideas thoughtful and challenging.

- This announcement in the morning paper was the main topic of discussion in the village, especially at Little Paddocks. No one knew who had placed this absurd announcement, it had to be a joke but at the appointed hour friends and neighbors just happened to drop by....and since this is a Christie novel, a murder did occur. This 1950 novel is an interesting look at village life in postwar England. The housing shortages, food rationing (and resulting underground trading), the influx of foreigners and the English themselves left uncertain at how to cope with the postwar world. Little Paddocks was a slice of this new world, the owner, Letty Blacklock had opened her home to a childhood friend, two young distant relatives, a boarder and hired a displaced person as a cook/housekeeper. Fortunately for all concerned Jane Marple was visiting nearby and was soon unraveling all the little village mysteries - just who was the strange man seen around town, why did Miss Blacklock wear those necklaces, how was the victim at Little Paddocks and why was he there and why was there a second murder? This is one of my favorite novels, as always with Christie the clues are all there but the plot twists and turns so much that it would be a rare reader indeed who could arrive at the answers before Miss Marple reveals all.
