REVIEW OF RESEARCH DESIGN IN POLITICAL SCIENCE HOW TO PRACTICE WHAT THEY PREACH

- I have to admit, I was hesitant to buy this one in hardcover. I did not care for her last book, Faking It. But boy was I glad I took the chance after finishing this one! The romance between Cal and Min reminds me of the characters in Fast Women (love the Glenlivet) and Welcome To Temptation. Cal, Min and friends are really well-developed and you find yourself immersed in their world within 30 pages. This book was a one-nighter. I loved it. Buy this book!

- Because of all the 5-star reviews, I thought this book would be a fun, romp-y kind of read. In reality, it's one of those "throw the book at the wall" experiences, except I was reading it on an E-reader, so definitely did not to break that just because I hated this book so much. I don't venture into this realm of "chick lit" often, but it's a guilty pleasure, so I thought "why not?" Here are some reasons:- trite writing- annoyingly contrived situations, like the two protagonists (Min and Cal) caught kissing by Min's best friend, Liza, and she hits Cal with her purse. Who does that? This happens 3 times in the book, and is completely ridiculous.- Min sarcastically calls Cal "charm boy" to his face because she doesn't want to be swayed by his charm. Yup, that is annoying too. Who says that? Where did Crusie even come up with this term, meant as a put-down?- the food references. Just because Min is "roundish" she's on a diet all the time, and Krispy Kremes seem to ever be in arm's reach. It's tiring that Krispy Kremes become the short-hand for all things sinful. Hearing about someone's dieting is about as entertaining as watching paint dry. Been there, Bridget Jones.- ugly shoes. Min is supposed to have "great taste in shoes" and Cal notices. Unfortunately, her killer shoes are bedazzled with plastic cherries, floppy flowers, and plastic fish. No guy, no woman would call these 'great shoes.'" - Cal chides her about being a risk-averse actuary who probably has a plain black cell phone. She in turn thinks that he is one of those guys that needs to have a "bell and whistles" type of phone. I read that this book was published in 2010, but was written a lot earlier than that, but please, EVERYONE has a smart phone now, and even before that, phones were getting sleeker. Crusie's editor should have red-flagged this point, because it's just a stupid point in the book that makes you question the writer and her lack of inventiveness here.- two-dimensional, annoying parents who are not developed at all- Crusie write a line about "her bra was so sheer it was probably illegal in several states." Last I heard, Victoria's Secret does ship to all 50 states, so not sure what this line even means. Lazy writing.- Min is not a very sympathetic character because she distrusts everyone, all the time, but this distrust is meant to endear us (the readers) to her if only she could see clearly how much Cal is in love with her. Blech!- a situation at the end where Min's ex-boyfriend David calls parents, sisters, and best friends and tells them that Cal is seducing their daughter "right now" and to get over to her apartment, and they all actually do. She is 33 years old. Horribly contrived scene. Cal and MIN are ALWAYS interrupted and are never alone, which is frustrating, because they never get the opportunity to iron out their differences. I gave it two stars, because I like a smattering of the characters: Bonnie, Cal, Shanna and Harry, the least annoying and best drawn of the bunch.
