REVIEW OF MARKET LEADER INTERMEDIATE 3RD EDITION TEACHER39S BOOK

- I think that this book was good and bad. The detail in this book made the book both good and bad. The detail was good because Howard Fast describes things really well, which makes the reader get a clear picture of how horrible war can be. The detail was bad because Howard Fast can go on forever about really, really boring things. For example, he uses about two whole pages to talk about whether Adam, the main character, actually loves his girlfriend. Also, Fast uses about one and a half pages discussing what kind of bread the people in Lexington eat, and why they eat that certain type of bread. People in middle or high school can kind of relate to Adam, the main character, because he is fifteen. He deals with relationship problems, just like we do. The beginning of this book was really boring, but it got exciting during the end. There is a lot of suspense. When you read this book you will wonder, "Is Adam going to die?" If you can't deal with gore, curse words or violence don't read this book. Since this book is about war, there is violence involved. For example, Fast describes people being stabbed with bayonets. There are also some curse words in this book. I gave this book four stars because while the book can be good, it can also be really boring. If you like historical fiction try reading this book because it will give you a insight on peoples' personal feelings during the American Revolution.

- This is a really good book for women who don't like the usual fare on this topic. Eisenberg has taken a topic I generally avoid and made it approachable and informative about what every women (and man) should know about planning for later life. Many of my women friends have been left bewildered and overwhelmed when forced by circumstances to assume control of the purse strings. In this often laugh-out-loud chronicle Eisenberg imparts relevant useful information that even the most financially challenged female can embrace. I recommend it to women young, old, but mostly in the middle.
