REVIEW OF ORGANIC SPECTROSCOPY WILLIAM KEMP PDF DOWNLOAD

- i read mere christianity and screwtape years ago and was delighted to see them in one volume with other 'signature classics' by ol' clive staples lewis. if you want to go to narnia on the pop culture train, pass on this. if you want contemporary thought by a man long dead, but his words still live and indict the modern mind to stretch beyond complacency, get this volume NOW!

- I have always loved the writings of Clive Staples Lewis, ever since I first read his Screwtape Letters many years ago. Lewis is by my assessment the greatest mind in English literature in the past century. It is the way his mind works, even on paper, that I love the most. I eagerly await a collected lifetime works of his in the future. Mere Christianity is the published manuscripts of his famous WW2 radio broadcasts, and they have been on the market ever since 1944. Fortunate for all his Christian readers! Lewis has a way with words to make profound things seem simple. He is not hard to understand and his explanations use a lot of good everyday examples to illustrate his points. When he has made that point, he uses even more examples to make the point absolutely clear. Then he apologizes for any shortcomings! Mere Christianity is one of those books I have now read at least four times; it has that much impact. The only other books I have ever read more than once also include a trilogy by Lewis on adult sci-fi, so you can see my continuing devotion to things Lewisian. Lewis takes the reader on a journey of the mind in which we are given the explanation of human nature and why there is a supreme God. This is clear and convincing stuff, believe me. Lewis speaks of a sense of right and wrong as being inherent in all humans. We respond to a divine calling toward this sense, and out of it all comes our awareness of God and the divine purpose behind life. If you are an atheist you have no excuses after Lewis is through with you, or you shouldn't have any. There are reasons for things that happen in the world of human beings and every affect has a cause. Moral law and the interaction of God and man are indisputable. When it comes to a complete yet unambiguous philosophy on Christianity, Lewis pulls no punches here. Christianity is not an idea or another theology; it's a way of life. Using the basic Law of Human Nature, Lewis gets right to the point of why we were created, why every human understands why every other human acts out of moral compunction and responsibility, no matter his or her background, culture, creed, or other religious beliefs. We are all victims of a warped nature. It is natural to do what is wrong, believing it is right. It is, says Lewis, almost perverse to resist the temptations toward doing wrong. That explains the immorality and amorality in our world. And to overcome this warped nature, we must consult God. We must repent. We must be reformed into new creatures. That too is the central aspect of what Jesus does and is still doing. Regeneration by way of a substitution of Himself in our stead before the eternal God. Because he was God in the flesh (Emmanuel) who paid the price and offers forgiveness. This treatise is superbly quotable. For instance, Lewis tells us early on that "If we do not believe in decent behavior, why should we be so anxious to make excuses for not behaving decently?" People, he says, "know the Law of Nature; they break it. These two facts are the foundation of all clear thinking about ourselves and the universe we live in. in another example, when talking about good and bad people and why they behave thusly, Lewis tells us that ultimately, "Good people know about both good and evil: bad people do not know about either." Well put, Mr Lewis. He then presents God as the Power behind this Law, and the facts supporting the laws. It is something that is "put into our minds ...a sort of inside information." I would challenge any reader to defy what Lewis is saying here. You can't deny your own conscience without dire consequences. Creation and God is at the central core of Christianity. Evil exists because a dark Power (Satan) was once good but fell from grace. Salvation exists because a Good Power (Jesus, ie God in the flesh) intervened for us. The central Christian belief is that which surrounds Christ's claims to deity and saviorship. This "religion" is so unique and universal because of this. Lewis uses delightful and tidy illustrations for each and every point in his arguments. So much so that they actually don't sound like arguments at all but more like very obvious conclusions. How can any mind disagree? But he never condescends to the reader; rather he apologizes for any vagueness that may exist, and asks the reader to go on to the next idea or to drop any dissensions in an agreeable and peaceful way. Lewis is one never to force a point; his gentlemanly manner and childlike persuasion overrules that kind of squabble. Lewis goes for the jugular when explaining the biggest reason for man rejecting this singular view of God. Our pride gets in the way. It is the foremost of sins; if you don't think that, consider that Satan, once the most glorious of angels, fell because of his pride. We all tend to think of Ourselves, not God, as the primary reason for living. Our gaze, as the Bible clearly teaches, should always be heavenward. How well it has been said, "aim at heaven and you will get earth 'thrown in': aim at earth and you will get neither." In a world wherein spirituality is not dealt with in a healthy fashion, the fool puts the blame for all shortcomings on everything around him, the disillusioned or dispassionate man says everything is nonsense and passing on to other planes of secular understanding, and the Christian says that "creatures are not born with desires unless satisfaction for those desires exists." Spiritually, we are all destined for another country, the heavenly country. We were made for another world, and only through responding to the Law of nature and the divine moral imperative (and the call of the Christian gospel) can we achieve that world. So much in the Christian life has to be taken on Faith. God offers some things, the necessary things, then asks us to trust Him for the unexplained things left over. Consider again that, in Adam and Eve, we rejected the perfect place and condition; so having come back begging to God for redemption, is it not appropriate that He forgives but does not have to explain everything? A wayward child does not ask for irreverent and superfluous details of his new home when he has been accepted back into it after his waywardness ends. There is a nice description of the deity of Christ here. God creates man, but 'begets' His only son. A cat begets a cat, a bird begets a bird, man begets a son or daughter like himself. God begets ... God. Full godship and power and glory and unity. That's Jesus. Thus the trinity (rejected by Islam and Jews) is acceptable. If several lines make up a figure and several figures (ie squares) make up a cube, so it is that several 'persons' make up a divine God. Anybody who wishes to argue away this reasoning be warned: the Bible proclaims it and who are we to say God is not able? There is also a nice description of time vs eternity. Lewis tells us that God dwells in eternity; hence He is outside our perception of the flow of time itself. This is important in thinking about this worlds and the heavenly world, especially where it pertains to prophecy and God knowing the future. It helps to explain how Christ died for those before him as well as those after him. He was, and still is, 'out of time'. Says Lewis, "If you picture Time as a straight line along which we have to travel, then you must picture God as the whole page on which the line is drawn." In other words, God has no history, in the way that we know history. And when we inherit a portion of Christ (by accepting and believing in him as he asks us to) then we inherit eternal life in the most real way. This 'putting on of Christ' is the whole point of Christianity. Handing over our whole selves to God, through Christ, is both difficult and profoundly easy. Lewis explains this in a way that makes the issues simply profound and profoundly simple. The whole world, say the saints of the ages, is divided between Christians and non-Christians. If the difference is a mere faith in Jesus and what he claimed to be, then so be it. The world seems complicated by all its claims. A couple of more quotes from Lewis: "One soul in the whole creation you do know: and it is the only one whose fate is placed in your hands." It is your own soul. "How monotonously alike all the great tyrants and conquerors have been; how gloriously different are the saints." This, we have to suppose, is mere Christianity.
