- Anyone who's read Kin Platt knows to expect a tight, sometimes humorous, always spine-tingling adventure with a bit of psychological daring-do thrown in for good measure. This time, Steve and Sinbad are out to solve the mystery of all mysteries. By all appearances, all of the "clues" seem to be in Steve's head when, before you know it, Minerva's dad meets the business end of a time bomb, Steve finds an old neighbor under the spell of Mandrake (a bracelet made of a mandragora root), Herk and Steve stumble onto the witch who wouldn't (for her own reasons), and a platinum blonde who looks older than she should, along with a legendary Hollywood vampire, do their best to ensure Steve and Sinbad are out of their hair forever. Sign up for the waiting list, and spend your spare time cloud-busting while you wait for this outstanding book. You'll be glad you did!

- This book is extremely well written and a wealth of information. But one must bare in mind that it is written by the prosecutor and Mr Bugliosi is constantly patting himself on the back and minimizing the efforts of all other investigators. One question I have is that when the murders first happened there was much speculation in the press about hoods placed on the victims. Mr Bugliosi credits this to the fact that Susan Atkins wrote on the front door with a towel then threw the towel into the room where it landed on one of the victims heads thus giving rise to the "hood". However the crime scene photos ( even the whited out one in the book ) clearly show the rope tied about the victims head going OVER the towel meaning the towel was placed on his head first and then the rope was tied over that. Yet to this day Mr Bugliosi says it was merely thrown into the room...HmMMM
