REVIEW OF PWD DATA FOR CIVIL ENGINEERS

- A most interesting read, which gives ideas on how to be a caring individual, quotes from Einstein and the Bible that you may not find familiar, and enough character details and mystery plot to keep you involved. I just reread it, and found details I'd not noticed the first time through.
- The author pulls the mirror up to our faces and makes us confront our own prejudices today and mourn our prejudices of the past. Of all the things I come away with in this book, I wholeheartedly support the author in his view that race matching in adoption is a destructive practice in all its various guises. Yes, 'it ought to be replaced by a system under which children in need of homes may be assigned to the care of foster or adoptive parents as quickly as reasonably possible.' We have several couples in our neighborhood who have adopted children of other races, and two black children are among them. This is real progress. Gisela Gasper Fitzgerald, author of ADOPTION: An Open, Semi-Open or Closed Practice?
