REVIEW OF DYNA 2000 IGNITION INSTRUCTIONS HARLEY

• I've read a lot of the posted reviews and see a recurring viewpoint. Jordan is losing it. Whether it be the corruption of the One Power, an overbearing female editor, or a greedy desire to milk the readers from book to book, it is clear that he is losing direction. I commend him on the first 5 or 6 books. A tremendous storyline and plot, a geographic world that he is able to describe without losing coherence, and a cast of characters that far surpasses

Hollywood for movie extras. I especially like the way he does jump around. Some storytellers get too involved with sticking to one scene and finishing it, but Jordan is not afraid to bounce around between characters and scenes (it reminds me of the fast paced scene-changes of Star Wars). I do not like his break from traditional grammar, the way he throws adverbs and adjectives around makes it hard to follow, kind of like reading something from Shakespeare. Unfortunately, the huge breaks in storylines, the micro-stories that don't just evolve, but appear out of nowhere, the meekness of the male characters, the inability to continue hunting arch-enemies have all contributed to a great fizzle. After book 1, I bought 2-8. I am reading 8, but if it continues to fizzle, I may take a break until the next few books are out in paperback to see if Jordan recaptures the flair needed to bring the story to a climax. Other recommendations: Stephen R. Donaldson, "The Thomas Covenant Chronicles"; Raymond E. Feist, "The Riftwar Saga"; Elizabeth Hayden, "Rhapsody".

• You must read this! It is full of twists and new threads, and old threads being untangled. The prologue annoyed me a bit (as much as one of these books can, anyway) because 48 pages were used in giving the viewpoints of Elaida, Gaywn, Sevanna etc on the Battle at Dumai's Wells, which, as you remember, finished "Lord of Chaos". Normally I wouldn't have minded, but when I first read this book, it was the last of the series. Mr Jordan does a lot of that in this book, giving the perspectives of the Forsaken, the Aiel, the Aes Sedai, Morgase, Min (who I don't like- she flirts too much with Rand, while pretending she doesn't, and never has the guts to say something to him-but her viewings are interesting.) Elayne is ... Elayne. Looking for the Bowl, in love with Rand, but worried about Aviendha and Min loving him too. I've never liked Nynaeve, and I like her less here. She is a whining, conceited, can't-see-what's-in-front-of-her-because-her-head-is-too-big, prim and self-pitying fool. For all her talk about sense, she has the least of all the characters. Mat is still himself- carefree and gambling and chasing girls while running from trouble as he sees it. Trouble has formed a habit of following him, though. Perrin is being a dutiful husband to the overbearing and jealous Faile- I can't wait till the hawk arrives. Egwene is Amyrlin in Exile, slowly and carefully gaining more power and say and respect, even though it means discarding custom. Rand is fighting against the Forsaken, the Aes Sedai, Lews Therin... He's worried about what Sammael and the rest of them are up to, about the Asha'man staying sane, about staying sane himself, about what to do with the Aes Sedai, and Andor and Cairhien without rulers and a thousand more things. I think he might go mad from the stress, not the taint on saidin. Read this book if you have to spend food-money to buy it, or if you have to fail maths... Mr Jordan, keep up the good work!
