REVIEW OF MANUALE AUTOCAD CIVIL 3D RUSPERCABINS

- Frank Herbert has crafted a vast universe in his Dune chronicles, with well-established politics, religion, an established economy and family dynasties. At the forefront of his immense worldbuilding is our hero, Paul Atreides, who at the beginning of the novel is a mere fifteen years old. He is the son of a duke and has been trained since childhood to later become a duke himself. His mother is a Bene Gesserit, a school that teaches what most would consider a type of witchcraft. The novel takes place 8000 years in the future; however, it takes place in a time when computers have become prohibited. It centers around the planet Arrakis, which is the sole source of the valuable spice melange. The planet is so dry that its inhabitants wear stillsuits to maintain moisture. In fact, to shed a tear or to spit is a sign of honor, as each drop of water is so precious. Paul's father, Duke Leto has been named governor of this very important planet but is soon betrayed by a rival family. Paul Atreides escapes and is forced to brave the hostile environment and people on Arrakis to help restore justice to his family. The appeal of Dune is well understood.

While our hero is an aristocrat, we see his character develop over the course of the novel from a teenager in training with a great love for people into a messianic leader who saves the Fremen of Arrakis from the Harkonnen family. To build a universe such as Herbert did in Dune is monumental. Furthermore, like many of the greats of science fiction, Frank Herbert was ahead of his time. A great part of the novel focuses on the ecology of Arrakis -- a topic that we now see as the focus in science and industry on Earth. He writes skillfully and is able to communicate his intricate universe in a story that is approachable. My criticism of the novel first lies in the writing style. The narrative point of view is written in the third person, and the perspective shifts from person to person at a moment's notice. Perhaps a lot of the tension is removed with this style of writing, for the reader has complete knowledge of each character's motives in his or her actions. Unfortunately, I see this writing style has alienated some readers so much as to give this novel a 1-star rating, which is absolutely ludicrous. My only other frustrations with the novel are the excess detail often given about the Bene Gesserit and the quite abrupt ending to the novel. Overall, this novel clearly stands as one of the hallmarks of speculative fiction and is required reading for any fan of the genre. I have not read any of the subsequent novels, but I appreciate the vast world Herbert has created.

- Dune is the first of six books in a series, and is definitely the best one. The others, I think, bring it down, but Dune is amazing. Paul Atreides of House Atreides is forced into the desert after House Atreides arch-enemy, House Harkonnen, aided by the Emperor, attacks the household. With his mother, he joins the mysterious Fremen, who, despite pompous Dukes who feel it's theirs, control the valuable resource known as Spice which makes it possible for Space travel. Paul is part of the prophecy and is the Kwisatz Haderach, which is what the Bene Gesserit have been trying to accomplish in their breeding programs. However, due to a glitch, he's come one generation too early, and the Sisterhood (known as witches to many) aren't ready for him. This book was spectacular. I've read it so many times it's falling apart. It may be confusing at times, but that just makes it more interesting.
