REVIEW OF ASTRA G ENGINE FUSE BOX

- Set along the Erie Canal in 1850, this robust novel is filled with interesting characters trying to make a go of it along this busy waterway connecting the eastern seaboard with the interior parts of the country - before the railroads came to dominate. Dan Harrow comes off the farm to take a job as a towboy and through hard work and good fortune is able to get his own boat. He meets Molly Larkins who becomes his cook; it seems they might marry but Dan comes to realize the canaller's life is not for him, and when he decides to take a job on a farm, they depart company. He also befriends the evil outlaw Gentleman Joe Calash and must overcome the bully Jotham Klore in a fist fight that takes on legendary proportions. The story is somewhat episodic with some chapters reading like separate short stories, but the basic storyline of Dan and Molly and their tribulations remains steady throughout. The book is an excellent piece of regional historical fiction, with very realistic and lively characters holding our attention from beginning to end.

- Beth Kephart's Still Love In Strange Places is a poignant, loving tale of her learning to love the people, the land and the country she married into-El Salvador. It puts this extraordinary place, with a painfully sad history and a future that speaks or reemergence in a much bigger, more poetic context. I felt for her and the real people she brought to life. Makes you want to come here as I have just done. Mark Monchek
