REVIEW OF VERMEER BC1800XL WIRING DIAGRAM

• There are really three parts to Raschke's new book. The first is a history of philosophical and religious postmodernism, the second part is a critique of the politicization and legalization of Evangelical Christianity, and the third part is what a Christian faith stripped of our politics and self-comforting legalisms (idolatry) might look like. You can read any of the three parts as a self-standing work. Anyone curious about what postmodernism is apart from the usual clichés will find the first part very informative. Those who like me, enjoy a little bomb-throwing, will enjoy the second part. And those who are actually interested in the nuts and bolts of a postmodern ministry will appreciate the third part. Underlying all of this though, is a truly threatening proposition for the vast majority of Evangelicals who seek salvation through Big Box cathedrals, who feel comfort in the herd mentality of the new political/moral laws, and who prefer to seek salvation through crazy rationalistic formulations of literary theories. Knowledge collapsed into salvation will always be Gnosticism, as Raschke says, one of the greatest heresies of all time and one that has overtaken American Evangelicalism. Basically Raschke beckons us to worship God by way of the Spirit and not the letter (or knowledge) of the law, for as Paul said, the Spirit gives life but the written code (of reason) kills. But faith alone as Martin Luther said, and Raschke is fond of repeating, makes us uneasy. We need our hard and fast idols. And America (conservative as well as liberal) is all about the idolatry of the written codes, the idols of reason, and salvation through obedience to (many) laws. Evangelicalism is not about the freedom of the New Testament writers because Evangelicals are afraid that freedom leads directly to gay marriages, gun laws and teenage abortions. So once again we have "a fence built around the law" -- the ancient call to protect God from Man by legalisms. "On both the left and right, Protestantism - with its denominational, ministerial, and ecumenical councils, its political action committees, its preoccupation with palaces proffered as church buildings, its elaborate financial schemes and fund-raising...It has buttressed these worldly ambitions with regal rationalism that aggrandizes the institution of the church and its claims at the expense of broken souls crying out for grace and forgiveness." Raschke is pointing us back to the God who cares not about the widow's penny (much less the golden calf of materialism), but about a broken and contrite heart. God cares about our relationship to him above all else. "Proofs," "reasons," and "the rule of law" are not the basis for a relationship. They do not make for "Good News." Jesus broke rules, he didn't make up more rules. And look what happened to him. In one of the greatest insights of the book, Raschke points out that Hitler had a lot more in common with Hegel than Nietzsche. As a friend of mine emailed me after reading this book, echoing my own sentiments, "I no longer feel like I have to write this book, Raschke did it for me."

- I have had the privilege of being one of Prof. Beal's students at Eckerd College. We used this book as one of our textbooks for a course on biblical literature. Beal is a true feminist and an excellent biblical interpreter. His findings in this book show that the gender issues and other prejudices that plague our modern day society have their roots thousands of years before us. By using the book of Esther as his main source, Beal shows that a biblical book is capable of holding just as much injustice as others hold justice. I would recommend this book to any feminist, or anyone interested in fighting prejudices of any kind.
