REVIEW OF FLOWERS FOR ALGERNON HOLT MCDOUGAL

- This is a book which deserves a wide reading in the social sciences for its brazen and determined effort to deeply problematize the notion of the "social." At the same time, as I read the first few chapters, I had a sense of deja vu. The program Latour is putting forth--at least initially-- appears not so different from that of Fredrik Barth -- not Barth's early transactionalist stuff, but his later work on the anthropology of knowledge. Specifically, Barth, F.1992 Towards greater naturalism in conceptualizing societies. In Conceptualizing Society. Kuper, A., eds. Pp. 17--33. : Routledge. and Barth, F.1993 Balinese worlds. Chicago: University of Chicago Press. put forth a very similar approach to the "social." Barth himself is a great admirer of Latour (see his praise for Laboratory Life and Science in Action in his 2002 piece in Current Anthropology) but Latour--at least here--doesn't seem to be reading Barth.... Latour is also taking great pains to distance himself from Bourdieu's reflexive sociology, and from critics who would label ANT as postmodernist. Highly recommended if you're interested in this sort of thing.

- This is just a review of the 2010 edition of this particular work by Jung. The paperback cover is crisp, mature, well-balanced in its design, color, motifs. There are two prefaces by Jung and a new 4-page note on the 2010 edition relating it to the "Red Book". The typeset pages of the actual Jung text appear to be taken directly from a past printing, and are just right for reading - - no new, modern, gaudy liberties are taken with the font or layout of the body of the text, the headings, or the footnotes -- it looks like something printed in the 50s, as I think it should. The original one-page bibliography and Jung's extensive index are here as well. The paragraphs of the original text are numbered 553-758, in line with the collected works. In my opinion this particular edition of the text is very nice, and much more handy for reading or toting around than the collected works.
