REVIEW OF PSYCHOLOGIE EN MINDFULNESS BIJ EMOTIE ETEN

- Yes, Sunny Randall is Spenser in a dress. But, it's not so much that the characters are the same, or that the plot is the same (which they are) it's that the /writing/ is the same. And we love that writing. The same witty dialogue. That same quick read. Those same kind of characters -- interesting, witty, and always sharp dressers. You can always tell who is a bad guy in Parker's novels -- they're the ones that dress badly. Richie and Spike (two of the men in Sunny's life) are worth the price of admission. If you are a Parker junkie (like me) buy it now. Otherwise, wait for it to come out in paperback or wait for the movie.

- Obviously, Robert Parker can write. That's not the issue any more. But why does he choose to write the same book over and over again? Sorry, but just because Sunny is a woman, can't cook, and doesn't have a perfect romance doesn't make her that different from Spenser. She has the same "moral code" thing, for lack of a better term, and the whole Millicent rich runaway in distress from an unloved family is Paul Giacomin all over again, not to mention the one Parker did a few years ago, I forgot which book, as they tend to blur. I appreciate that Parker is branching out, with Sunny and Jesse Stone, as Spenser does become a bit perfect at times, as a character. But for better or worse, this is run-of-the-mill Parker. Which is not to say I didn't devour it in a couple of hours like I always do, but it's already half gone from my head.
