REVIEW OF NIGHT BY ELIE WIESEL DIALECTICAL JOURNAL

- i love this book not only because roald dahl is my relative but because whn i find a good book i can not put it down and with this book my mum got up me for reading so much.
- Isabel Allende's Eva Luna manages to be about many diverse things: a picaresque soap opera; the story of Latin America; the tale of a woman coming to self-determination; an autobiography; a description of the creation and nature of fiction: and yet never loses its narrative fascination. Allende uses very little dialog, and the characters, Eva herself included, are more 'imaginary' than most novelists attempt: but believable and in the end quite moving. This was narrative at its most magical. It bore the signs of great art, at least for me: the resonance of other times and places, the sense of recognition...Eva Luna at first reminded me strongly of Fina Estampa by Caetano Veloso, so much so that I went looking for a song called Eva Luna on the CD which wasn't written in 17th century there. I read recently an Japan (basis for
