REVIEW OF BEETHOVEN SYMPHONY NO 5

- I liked the book, but it was kind of sad in a good way though because no matter what George knew that Lennie was going to die so he killed him in a less painful way. Steinbeck created really good characters because they were so believable that it could of most likely been a non-fiction story. It's a good novel for young adults because it talks about stuff that could happen in real life and little kids might not understand the story or the words in the story. The social issue that it relates to is probably racism.

- I first picked up "Of Mice and Men" because I loved how slender it looked among the scores of 500 pages novels in the library. I finished it in two days, which is rare for me. The story was touching, anyone would say that. The characters were all colorful -- one was intense, one was wise, another childish and slow. The relationship between George and Lennie was very complex and interesting. The ending was difficult to understand at first and very sad -- I have to say that I cried because I knew what was about to happen and didn't want to face the reality. But this book was about reality. It showed how hard it was to live in the 20's, on a ranch. It showed how tough it was to face life alone, surrounded by people who have spent years covering up their scars and building up defenses. The dirty language, which I didn't like, was also reality of the situation, I guess. And in the end, the reality was hard to take. It was a type of love really. If you read what George said in the last couple pages, it becomes clear. He was saying 'I love you Lennie, and I can't bear to have you suffer and know that you'll never get those rabbits. I love you so much that I'll do something to you that hurts me more than you'll ever know.' In the end, I think George 'died' that day too. His life would never be the same, and sadly, the book ended hopelessly.
