REVIEW OF TV 2020 THE TV ECOSYSTEM NAB SHOW NEW YORK

- What can be said about this book that has not been said many times before. I just feel compelled to attempt and add something to the other comments made about this book. The novel centers around the idea of choices and consequences. If we choose one thing we may lose the opportunity for something else. A choice made today has unimaginable consequences days and maybe years later. The fate of the whole "world" lies with Jonah and how he chooses to use his powers and gifts, and Jonah feels completely unprepared for this. He's forced into dealing before he is ready. This book is an excellent read for adolescents. They are faced with choices each day and are so often incapable of seeing the consequences. The ending is ambiguous. We are left wondering what really did happen. This book is the first in a loosely connected series, and the answers will not come to you until you have read Gathering Blue and The Messenger, both of which are equally excellent books. I must say my peace about these books again though. A fourth grader may be able to read these books based on the vocabulary and basic story line, but a fourth grader will not be able to appreciate these books for what they are truly worth. The theme of creating a utopia and the disposal of the elderly are ideas that I don't think are appropriate for younger students. Please reserve using these books for middle school or high school students.

- I think that The Giver is a good book. I would give it a three out of five. It is about a perfect world. You can't get hurt and you have no feelings. You can not pick your job, you are assigned one. If you are the Receiver of memory you can have feelings and you can get hurt. I think that The Giver is a good book. It is for more advanced readers because sometimes it is hard to understand.
