REVIEW OF SAP BUSINESS ONE IMPLEMENTATION GUIDE

- The readers first encounter Pip in the renowned scene with the convict --

"growling, red-eyed, and desperate": "Bring me food, boy! Or I'll eat your heart and liver too.." Out of kindness in heart, Pip "befriends" the convict as his fate is changed forever. Little does he know how his whole existence is to complete the life of another--a stooping savior.Though of little social significance, Pip lives a content life full of innocent happiness and simple joys. As his horizon suddenly expands with an unexpected fortune, Pip finds his own path crossed with the paths of a misanthropic Miss Havisham and her young, beautiful, yet seductive ward Estella. Extravagance feeds Pip's vanity to burgeon, desire flourishes his motives of becoming some one he can never become. Pip strives desperately to extricate from the deepest root of his whole being. And the obsession grows for Estella as he wanders of further away from his true path.Followed by the death of Magwitch, love once again awakes within Pip as he embraces the man hidden in the darkest corner of his soul. No longer the dashing young man in his blooming age, Pip at last starts a expedition to pursue something that is conquerable.Thus we see "no shadow of another parting from her"...

- I am 16 years old and this was my summer reading book. I thought it was pretty good. Just because you have to read it for school, don't just discount it as a worthwhile book. Yes, it is long, but it DOES have a point. You have to keep in mind that Dickens published this in monthly installments in his magazine - so yes, it is long. But take your time and enjoy the story.
