REVIEW OF WELDING BOOK IN MARATHI

- Our 5th grade uses this book to review and demonstrate real uses of economics terms we've learned. Kids have a worksheet with simple definitions of terms and the following columns. Production- Natural Resources, Capital Equipment, Human Capital; Distribution -

How?,Where?; and Consumption - Uses. As we read the book together, the kids write examples from the story under the correct heading (we stop often and prompt "Did we hear some Natural Resources?" YES - the field, the seeds, sun, rain. etc.) This book is such an easy-going way to introduce 10-11 year olds(possibly younger) to the terms and understanding of Economics. Illustrations are also very engaging and gentle.

- i read this book when i was nine and it was brand new. It has always been on my list of wonderful stories. The bare bones of the story ARE true... wonderfully imagined by the author.And what is so compelling? It is the story of a boy who can not speak for himself... though there isn't much that gets by him. He is a stanger in a strange land.

He has a wonderful, spectacular treasure right out in front of everybody and yet no one sees it. Then, in the thrilling climax, the horse's worth is recognised and our hero is established. Ahh, so close to the emotional situation any imaginative child finds her/himself in. This story is especially poignant after the events of September 11, 2001. What would Agba make of this time? He was a proud boy. Agba made me sensitive to this and friendly to his people my whole life long. kind regards
