REVIEW OF WE THE PEOPLE GINSBERG 9TH EDITION SUMMARIES

- I am really learning a lot about my eating habits and better choices/ways to eat from this book. It's easy to read and has an easy to follow format that is addictive in itself. I'm making life changes and this book was right on time to help me in that pursuit.

- It is a pleasure to turn to the novels of Graham Greene (1904-91) the famous twentieth century British novelist. In a new Penguin edition his 1943 noir "The Ministry of Fear" includes a fine introduction by Alan Furst a fine novelist of spy fiction in his own right. The novel is set in World War II London suffering from the ravages of nightly bombing during the blitz. The anti hero is Arthur Rowe a shell of a man tortured by the mercy killing of his ill wife. Rowe had been tried for murder but was acquitted. He stops in at a fair for charity where he buys a cake. The cake was meant for a spy. The cake contains classified film. The short book follows Rowe's adventures as he is suspected of murdering a man at a seance. This book reminds the reviewer of Alfred Hitchcock's classic tales of innocent men wanted for murder. who solve the case (such as in "North by Northwest") The novel has a good resolution with Rowe finding true love and the Nazi criminals being killed or captured. One section of the book is set in a creepy nursing home where Rowe is sent following the loss of his memory. Through dreams the reader is carried back to an Arcadian England prior to the Great War of 1914. What makes Greene's tales so good is his ability to write elegant English, turn phrases and keep the reader in suspense. The Ministry of Fear is a superb classic of espionage writing!
