REVIEW OF OXFORD SOLUTIONS INTERMEDIATE 2ND EDITIONS TEST

- What do you get when you mix a Brit with a Texas Oilman, a London Society female missionary and an Oxfordian highbrow who specializes in whining and negative thinking. Place them in the 1930s, shake well in a stolen aircraft, fly them to an unknown part of the world somewhere in the Himalayan/Tibetan and run them out of fuel. What you get is a bloody good adventure that is written a bit like a Kipling tale. The story begins in India and takes you to Shangri-La, located in the valley of the 'Blue Moon', a place of moderate perfection. For in Shangri-La the cardinal rule is "moderation"-the key to extended life. In this microcosm of moderate perfection you will find a world where aging is retarded significantly and life exists to appreciate the aesthetic. Though the book was published in 1931, the "First Paperback Ever Published," it has an ageless 'Celestine Prophecy' style. Of course it was not the first 'Spiritual Adventure' story written but it was the first to incorporate first world technology (aviation) with spiritual wisdom. Not a romping, gut tingling, adventure tale, it does drag at times, but the ending has a nice twist and there are some adages that bring the read to a pensive pause. "People make mistakes in life by believing too much, but they have a damned dull time if they believe too little." Recommended
- fun story, old English was fun. I may add some more of these stories to my too read list someday.
