REVIEW OF COMPUTER STUDIES EXAM EXAMPLE PAST PAPERS

- A stunning book, that's really all I can say. Just make sure you read the chapter on the language, which is usually the last part of the book, first. If I were stuck on an island and could only bring two things I would bring the BIBLE (how things were and will be) and 1984 (how things must not be).
- George Orwell's 1948 novel "1984" depicts a nightmarish totalitarian society in which the government controls all aspects of a person's life. This novel follows Winston Smith, the protagonist. Winston's character is one which Orwell creates in order to evoke sympathy from the reader. I know that while reading this novel, at times I felt very bad for Winston and was really scared for which outcomes Winston was placed in. Orwell does this well by creating a gloomy atmosphere in the novel. Winston lives in Airstrip One, geographically known as London. Airstrip One is the textbook definition of a dystopia. It is a poverty stricken area with many people sick and living in ruins. Everywhere on the streets signs posted saying, "Big Brother is watching you" are present. This omnipresent aspect of the novel, "Big Brother" is what first begins to create a menacing environment for the novel. This novel was Orwell's idea of what a communist society would be like, and his idea is not only true, but it is one that is beginning to form in modern society. Written during the communist scare in the late 40s, Orwell prophesied that this would be what the world would come to in the near future. If one is to consider the mass movement in media and technology today, reading this book would make one question fear the direction that technology is headed. With webcams, tvs, phones, microphones, computers, and cameras of all different shapes, sizes, colors, and uses placed around every corner, Orwell's imaginative idea of the future might be more accurate than fiction. The government coming into total power using everything we take for granted against us could seem like a very plausible aspect of the near future! This fantastic novel provides excellent insight into what the government is actually capable of, AND, currently is DOING, such as in North Korea. The thought of this occurring though seems too dark, too scary, and too frightening to imagine-almost unreal. Orwell writes this novel in such a way that it has a fear factor to it. Although I quite love this, it might not be for those who are faint of heart. It's underlying message-that these events are highly plausible- might leave people scared and worried. This is because Orwell does not sugarcoat anything. He writes with cynical and harrowing details, presenting everything clearly and concisely. By the end of the novel, I was convinced that what had occurred to Winston was far worse than death. All the things we take for granted such as love, freedom, justice, and independence are alien concepts in "1984." Any small instances of these ideas, and Orwell abolishes them from the text as fast as he can. Orwell seems to be destroying all of Winston's hopes throughout the novel. Every time Winston has a shred of hope that good will triumph over evil, Orwell goes out and makes it completely the opposite. He doesn't share this view that he creates for Winston, so he manages to also destroy it in his own character by the end of the novel. Orwell ensures that he will frighten you. I personally enjoyed "1984" both as a novel and as a possible warning for where the future is headed. Although it is a book which some people might find bleak, it is one that manages to get the authors point across. Orwell raises questions in his novel about government, mass media, and absolute control over mind, body, and soul. These questions really have no easy answer, and most answers still remain unclear. I believe "1984" is a must read for people, in order to understand how important their lives really are. You better get it in your hands now before "Big Brother" is watching you too... O_O
