• Yes, I loved it. Nobody can depict characters of people the way Steinbeck can. He also has the power to take you to where the story is set and makes you one of his characters. You feel with them...you live with them, you hate and love people around you...

• Of mice and man by John Steinbeck was published in 1939. The story takes place in the salinas valley, california, during the Great Depression. The drought in the Great Plain forces them to move to the west. The people who move to the west are called migrant workers. Our characters, Lennie and George, are migrant workers too. They are the only people who work together that make them not become lonely because they have each other to look after. Lennie is a huge man with a weak mind and George is small with strong thoughts. Both are totally different people. Lennie always causes problems that let George get in trouble. Lennie doesn't know how to control his power that made him kill many mice, than the pup. The troubles are getting larger and larger. Who will he kill next? I give this book five stars because it is a very good book for me to learn English. I learned many vocabulary words but the most important thing I learned is about friendship. Friends need to help each other and they both did. Friendship is not easy to maintain in a good status.
