REVIEW OF OVERSTREET COMIC BOOK PRICE GUIDE DOWNLOAD

- This book reads like it is transcribed and edited from a seminar. It's not hard to read and it is certainly inspiring. On stage Howard has a blinding charisma that no doubt sells a lot of books. My girlfriend bought this book at a seminar and I read it. Don't get me wrong - I have been through is Breakthrough To Success seminar twice and it is very worthwhile and somewhat deep. This is basically Howard's story of how he rose from failure to success by borrowing 30,000 and investing it in NLP training, building his executive coaching business through aggressive cold-calling, and finally breaking out in a big way as a superstar NLP guru. I don't know enough about NLP to assess whether Howard's thinking is original or better than Tony Robbins or Bandler and Grinder. I do know that he is a master salesman and in his marketing he has positioned himself as a developer of "cutting edge inner technologies" - which is an attractive jargon. I really like his workshop. He is friendly with Richard Branson and talks about the man frequently. While I think he is genuinely interested in what makes Branson tick - he's also catching a wave by basking in Branson's reflected glory. Catch the seminar. The book is ok. His CD courses are engaging... the ones I have heard.

- I've always liked reading books like this is because it introduces me to authors I've never heard of. For example, one of the most phenomenal stories is by a 15-year old recently published, young lady named Tierra French with "A Difficult Lesson". I read each story and the ones I really dug include: "Something Special", "Flimsy and Raggedy", "Not Tonight", "A Crisis of Faith", "Senseless", "Queen", "First Thing Monday Morning", "If He Didn't Go", "A Difficult Lesson", "Back Then", "Dancing at Esperanza's", "The Consequence", "Young Ballers", "Panhandling", "John Q's Blissful Journey", "Trick Dice", "The Cycle", "Pass It On", "Felicia and the Prodigy", "Ultimate Forgiveness", "Dead to the World", "Detour", "Colours", "The Day

Chano Died", "Charitable Roy", "The Fire This Time", "The Willow Tree", and "She Planted Faith in her Dream". You may be thinking that I liked every story in here, but believe me, there are quite a few I didn't care for. One example would be the very twisted "The Bag Lady" that I did NOT appreciate the humor about killing a dog because I am crazy about dogs the way most are crazy about babies. I thought "Sink or Swim" was an excuse for women to not lose weight. Yeah, the husband's explanation was rude but the theme behind this story is why the black community has such bad health now--we try to excuse everything. And "My Momma Said..." was a great story for goldiggers. A prize is a man with money? It's like the main character didn't learn a damn thing. I hated that story. "Death of a Salesperson" needed the editor to catch that the main character said she worked at the company thirty-two years (twice!) but then switch to thirty years. And I don't know what's on Omar Tyree's bird but the use of the n-word really bugs me regardless of whether he switched it up in the end and "Playin' the Role" EMBRACED the word. Guess some people still got a lot to learn! Anyway, I ended up joining a book club so I could buy books from each of these published authors. Thank you for all the hook-ups and the people to avoid. And Travis Hunter's story was the best of all, but I'm not surprised because I'm crazy about this author's work.
