REVIEW OF SOLUTIONS FOR MANAGERIAL ACCOUNTING GARRISON 13TH EDITION

- I should start by saying I didn't read the whole book. That's because I found it insulting that we were to believe this was a true biography. I resented the author passing off what he thought Gene Kelly must have been thinking during the AFI awards, I disliked the author painting Gene Kelly as mean-spirited and shallow. It was maddening to have the beginning of every chapter fractured with this conjecture. I considered this a total waste of money. Although I freely share my books with others, this book has been consigned to the role of doorstep.

- "The Traveler," written by Jewish Holocaust victim Antal Szerb and translated by Peter Hargitai, is an intriguing novel. The story begins in Venice, Italy, the place where Mihály (the main character) is celebrating his honeymoon with his wife Erzi. Suddenly, an unexpected encounter with János Szepetneki, an old friend of Mihály, stirred up the protagonist's past. It is when Mihály mistakenly boards the wrong train where his journey truly begins and launches his pilgrimage to find his true self. Clearly, Mihály was determined to visit different places, but what he was truly doing was exploring his character. It is through this private journey in which he realizes how untrue he had been to himself. Evidently, he's obsessed with his past, with the Ulpius house, where he used to play the victim with Tamás and where they would die through or for Éva. He doesn't seem to let go of his past and later decides to commit suicide just like his friend Tamás did. He arranges everything with Éva but an unexpected event changes his intention and he's finally cured of his past. The style of the language is poetic, elegant as it suggests the time of the 1930's.
