REVIEW OF CBSE CLASS 11 BIOLOGY PRACTICAL LAB MANUAL

- The introduction I had to 'Dune Messiah' was from a friend of mine, "It's atrocious...don't read it...there's no mindless blood and guts(if you want that, read Lord of the Rings)...it's nothing like the rest of the series." Well, I would completely disagree with the blatantly shallow comment that Dune Messiah is atrocious. But, I would not disagree with the notion that it is completely different from the rest of the series...and that is a good thing. Often times, I grow weary of series' that drone on with the same stylistic format, especially in sci-fi/fantasy. Take for instance, Lord of the Rings. I love the story, the plot, etc. But because of the style and the fact that the three books are actually one single book, it causes one of the sections to lag. That particular section is 'The Two Towers.' Sure, it has plenty of action and blood, but there is absolutely no thought or depth in it. It, literally, is just a bridge from one good book to the last, nothing more. This is where 'Dune Messiah' succeeds. It's not simply a continuation of 'Dune.' The book is a thought-provoking analysis of Paul and his religious Jihad. As 'Dune' concludes that Paul is a Jesus figure, 'Dune Messiah' concludes that one should decide objectively whether Paul is Jesus or Adolf Hilter. The book has an extremely thorough explanation of the inner-struggle of Paul's character that is only hinted at in 'Dune.' But, this book also gives the objective look at the opinions of priests, family members, heretics, newly-reiterated characters, and historians on Paul and his Imperial Jihad. Is what Paul is doing morally just? Or is it tyranny? The book leaves the reader with his/her own thoughts, but not without making the reader fully understand Paul. I never thought that a Science Fiction book could have such enthralling character development. But Frank Herbert truly has revealed that he can do it as well as any literary figure in history....and the plot's not too shabby either!! The only thing it lacks is Lady Jessica. Well, luckily, we haven't seen the end of her...

- The Book Dune, was in my opinion a very detailed book. It made you think about what the world could be like in a few million years. Dune was a very good book and it had lots of good detail. The book was written very thoroughly and it made me think about space for some reason. You get to witness the destruction of a city and then they make a new world for their people to live in.
